Appeals under the Finance Bill.

THE ALTERATIONS which have been made in clause 22 of the Finance Bill provide for an appeal on questions of total or site valuation first to a referee, and then either to the High Court or the county court according as the total value of the property as alleged by the commissioners does or does not exceed £500. This meets the very general objection which has been felt to leaving the final decision on these matters to an official appointed by the Treasury. The more important of the other alterations which have been made in clauses 11 to 26 are referred to below.

The South Africa Bill.

On Monday last the South Africa Bill was read a second time in the House of Commons. Mr. Balfour made an interesting speech, though, as he said, the House was "a thin and weary one." The leader of the opposition, like everyone else, recognized that the gravest issue raised by the new constitution was that relating to the native question in all its different aspects, but that the Bill, being a compromise, could not be amended in any matter of principle, and the Union Parliament must be trusted to solve future difficulties. Mr. Asquith also deplored the formal creation of a colour bar, and said "there is no difference of opinion among us on that point." He expressed himself as sanguine that the colour bar would in process of time be voluntarily removed by local legislation. Mr. KER HARDIE plainly intimated that attempts would be made in Committee to secure amendment of the Bill on the native question, but it is extremely doubtful whether even the slightest amendment will be made eventually. The chief interest about the South African constitution, as a legal and political document, lies in this—that two leading features of the American and the Australian constitutions respectively have been deliberately rejected, and exactly contrary provisions adopted. Under the American constitution every citizen—white and black—has equal rights secured to him by the letter of the constitution. Under the Australian constitution the States are expressly continued in their position of quasi-sovereign communities. In South Africa the black man is definitely made the political inferior of the white man, and the system of unification definitely destroys the sovereign rights so carefully preserved by the Australian federalism.

The Land Tax Clauses of the Finance Bill.

THE NUMEROUS changes which are being made in the Land Tax clauses as they pass through Committee of the House of Commons, in order to meet particular objections or to suit the Bill to the Government's new scheme for the valuation of land, are not of good augury for the successful working of the taxes. Sub-section 3 of clause 11 grants various exemptions from undeveloped land duty, including, according to the original words, "the site value of any parks, gardens, or open spaces, reasonable access to which is granted to the public, where, in the opinion of the commissioners, that access is of benefit to the public as contributing to the amenity of the locality." The words "granted to" have been altered to "enjoyed by," so that de facto enjoyment by the public will exempt from the tax, and apparently the "opinion of the commissioners" is to give place to the verdict of some independent body, though what that body is to be has not been decided. The suggestion of the substitution of the Local Government Board has, very naturally, not been received with approval. The extent of pleasure grounds attached to a house for which exemption may be claimed has been altered from one acre to five acres. Clause 12, which proposed the tax on ungotten minerals, has been struck out, and the new clause which is to take its place, and which imposes a five per cent. tax on mineral rents and royalties, will be discussed at a later stage. The first sub-section of the proposed new clause runs as follows: "There shall be charged, levied, and paid for every financial year on the rental value of all rights to work minerals, and of all mineral wayleaves, a duty (in this Act referred to as a mineral rights duty), at the rate in each case of one shilling for every twenty shillings of that rental value." Other sub-sections provide for the ascertainment of "rental value," and define "rent."

Valuation of Total Value and Site Value.

CLAUSE 13, which provides for the assessment and payment of the undeveloped land duty, was added to the Bill after considerable discussion on the provision that the tax is to be borne by the owner "notwithstanding any contract to the contrary." According to the definition in clause 27 "owner" means the person entitled to the freehold of the land, except that where land is let on lease for a term of which more than fifty years are unexpired the lessee is to be deemed to be the owner. It is not quite easy to see how this definition suits the imposition of the undeveloped land tax on the "owner." While the lease has more than fifty years to run the lessee pays; when the unexpired residue of the term is less than fifty years the lessor will pay. The reason for this is not apparent. Clause 14 defines the "total value" and the "site value" of land. The former means the amount which the fee simple of the land, if sold at the time in the open market by a willing seller in its then condition, might be expected to realize. An attempt to strike out the words "in the open market" failed. To arrive at "site value" land is to be hypothetically divested of building and of growing timber and fruit trees. But in valuing both total value and site value allowance is to be made for easements, rights of common, and restrictive covenants, though, as to such covenants, only "where in the opinion of the commissioners the restraint imposed by the covenant is reasonably necessary in the interests of the public, or in view of the character and surroundings of the neighbourhood, and the opinion of the commissioners shall in this case be final and not subject to any appeal." The operation of restrictive covenants on the value of the land will be in practice a matter of considerable importance, and, apparently, here also the reference to the commissioners is to be the subject of further consideration. After the site value has been arrived at various deductions are allowed by sub-section 4. These include the " value attributable to works executed, or expenditure of a capital nature (including any expenses of advertisement) incurred, for the purpose of improving the value of the land as building land," etc. The words in italics have been inserted by amendment, and words also have been added allowing for deduction in respect of expenditure of money in the redemption of land tax or rentcharges. Clause 15, which deals with the valuation of minerals, was postponed. Clauses 16 and 17, which provide for the actual valuation of land, have been entirely recast, in order to incorporate the scheme for Government valuation. Under clause 16 the commissioners are to cause a valuation to be made of all land in the United Kingdom, shewing separately the total value and the site value of each piece of land which is under separate occupation. An attempt to strike out "all," with a view to restricting the valuation to land which is to be actually taxed, failed; but an amendment was accepted requiring the commissioners to distinguish that portion of the site value which was due to the value of the land for agricultural purposes. By the end of Wednesday's sitting clauses 17 to 26 had also been added to the Bill, with the exception of clause 25 (exemption of land held for public and charitable purposes), which was postponed.

Limitation of Action of Debt.

THE REPORT of the Select Committee on Debtors (Imprisonment), upon the chief subject of which we commented last week, contains a suggestion for the reduction of the period of limitation in actions of debt. Referring to the indulgence which is usually the reason why debts are allowed to stand, the report says: "While such kindness may be well meant, it is often mistaken and disastrous to the recipient. With some doubt as to whether the subject is included in our reference, we recommend that the Statute of Limitations be amended, and the period during which a debt can be recovered reduced to three years." little singular that the committee make no reference to the Bill for the same purpose which was introduced in the House of Lords by Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., in 1894, and which passed the Committee stage in that House. This proposed to reduce the period of limitation in tort, except trespass to land, to one year; with a saving for cases where the tort was not discovered, and could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered, within the year. In cases of debt, where the debt did not exceed £5, the limitation was to be one year. In other cases of debt, and in cases of breach of contract, the period was to be three years. The fact that the Bill, after making an apparently good start, was not proceeded with, and has not, we believe, been revived, seems to shew that the idea of a reduction in the period of limitation was not received with favour. And yet, in the case of actions against public authorities, the limitation has been reduced to a periodsix months—which has sometimes been productive of injustice. Should the present recommendation be embodied in a Bill, it would be very desirable to give some consideration to the question of simplifying the existing law of limitation, which, partly by piecemeal amendment of the statutes, and partly by judicial decision, has got into a difficult and confused state.

Amendment of Money Bills in the Oversea Dominions.

It is sometimes said that the Privy Council has formally decided that an Upper Chamber in a colonial legislature has, in the absence of an express provision in the Constitution, no right to amend a money Bill. The question does not appear to have yet come before the Privy Council on appeal from any court of law, but in 1886 the Judicial Committee did make a report to the Queen on the subject. This was referred to by Lord HERSCHELL in the House of Lords on 26th and 27th of July, 1874, in such a way as to countenance the belief that the opinion of the Judicial Committee was given as the result of some judicial proceedings. What really happened was this: In 1872 the point arose in New Zealand as to the power of the Upper House to amend a money Bill, and an opinion was given by the English Crown Law Officers to the effect that nothing in the New Zealand legislation had altered the original rights and relations of the two branches of the legislature, and that the Upper House had no right to amend. The practice of the House of Commons was adopted as the proper analogy, though, of course, this practice was thus treated as a legal right in New Zealand. In 1885 precisely the same difficulty arose between the two Houses of the Queensland legislature. Both Houses joined in presenting a petition to the Queen on the subject, and by an Order in Council of the 8th of March, 1886, the Judicial Committee was directed to report whether the Queensland Constitution Act of 1867 conferred on the Upper House the power of amending money Bills. The opinion on the New Zealand case in 1872 was relied on by the Lower House of the Queensland legislature as laying down the proper rule for Queensland also. The petition thus referred to the Judicial Committee was the subject of their report made on the 27th of March, 1886. No witnesses were examined, and no arguments were heard, but the board simply reported, in effect, that the power of amending money Bills was not conferred on the Upper House. What is the exact effect of this report it is not easy to say. It can hardly be that the construction then placed on the Queensland Constitution has the technically binding force of a decision on appeal between litigants, and after argument from both sides. Clearly, however, these opinions shew the view of the relation of the two branches of the Legislature taken at the time by persons of judicial status, though there is nothing to prevent a different decision being given at the present day, for it is not the practice of the Judicial Committee to regard previous decisions as absolutely binding on them, even in ordinary litigation.

THE SCHEME suggested by Judge MULLIGAN in a letter to the Times of the 12th inst. is perhaps the most revolutionary of the proposals which have been made for dealing with the delay in judicial business. He refers to the statement in a recent leading article in the Times: "One thing is clear—things cannot remain as they are; the existing system of judicature, superior and inferior, no longer suits the country"; and he attributes the existing difficulties to the nature of the test by which business is divided between the High Court and the county court. "Such division," he says, "is not based on any difficulty inherent in the questions which arise for decision, but on a bare arithmetical calculation of the amount of money claimed. To enact that men not exceeding 100 lbs. in weight or of slender figure should bring all their actions in the county court, and that men of greater weight or of larger girth should bring all their actions in the High Court would not be more absurd. The existing line of demarcation is not founded on any rational principle and should be obliterated." Accordingly he suggests an amalgamation of the High Court and the county court into a single tribunal to be called the King's Court. This he would divide into twenty district courts, each district comprising three of the existing county court districts, so that the county court districts in each district court should be at successive distances from London—the first within fifty miles, the second more than fifty and less than a hundred, and the third more than a hundred miles away. Each district court would have an existing High Court judge as Chief Justice, and three county court judges to assist The district Chief Justice would devote half his time to the district court and half to London. "There would thus at all times be at least fourteen judges in London to deal with criminal appeals, Crown business, and a greatly diminished list of civil matters. The existing High Court judges would retain their salaries, but new judges of the same rank would receive 3,000 guineas and the assistant judges 2,000 guineas. Judge MULLIGAN claims for his system that it "would make all the courts radiate from one centre; it would secure uniformity of practice; it would bring justice to the doors of all suitors equally; it would remove the reproach that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor; and it would cause no additional expense." But we fear that it is no more than a vacation dream. Amalgamation of the High Court and the county court has for the present been definitely put on one side, and any reform we are likely to see for the next few years will be of a more modest nature.

The Powers of Directors.

THE decision of the House of Lords in Quin & Axtens v. Salmon (ante, p. 575) seems to have marked the final acceptance of the principles of the Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter case (1906, 2 Ch. 34) in company law. It is worth while to consider whether the full effects of the latter case have yet been realized.

The eighth edition of Buckley on Companies, at p. 558, used the following words as stating an accepted doctrine: "The company in general meeting have no doubt power to direct and Tahourdin (25 Ch. D. 320). But that decision, as was pointed .. out (not for the first time) by FARWELL, L.J., in Salmon v. Quin (1909, 1 Ch., at 320), was a decision on the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, and apart from that Act, which does not apply to companies incorporated since 1862, there is no such principle in existence.

The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ss. 90, 91, gave certain powers to the general meeting and the rest to the board; but the board was to act "subject to the control and regulation of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose, but not so as to render invalid any act done by the directors prior to any resolution passed by such general meeting." The Act of 1862 relegated this point to the articles of association, and it seemed possible to adjust the concurrent powers to any degree of nicety. Article 55 of Table A gave to the directors such powers as were not given by the Act or the articles to the general meeting, subject "to any regulations of the articles, to the provisions of the foregoing Act, and to such regulations, being not inconsistent with the aforesaid regulations or provisions, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting." This and very similar forms are common enough. Palmer's Precedents (articles 113, 114) give the like general powers to the board, subject "to the provisions of the statutes, and of these presents, and to any regulations from time to time made by the company in general meeting," and add, for further security, certain specified powers. But in almost every case the wholesale delegation of the company's powers was thought to be sufficiently corrected by a reference to regulations to be made by the company in general meeting.

In the Automatic case (supra), decided by WARRINGTON, J., in February and by the Court of Appeal in March, 1906, it was held that the general right of a simple majority to coerce the directors was incompatible with a delegation of the company's powers of management to the board, and could not be sustained. authority of Isle of Wight Railway Co. v. Tahourdin was reduced to cases under the Act of 1845. The articles in the Automatic case had made the powers of the board subject to regulations made by extraordinary resolution, and the directors held sufficient shares to defeat an extraordinary resolution. Marshall's Valve Gear Co. v. Manning, Wardle, & Co. (1909, 1 Ch. 267) was a case governed by article 55 of Table A, and NEVILLE, J., held that under this "the majority of the shareholders in the company at a general meeting have a right to control the action of the directors, so long as they do not affect to control it in a direction contrary to any of the provisions of the articles which bind the company." The "regulations made by the company in general meeting" were now evoked in support of the older theory, and NEVILLE, J., thought that the phrase was applicable to resolutions of a simple majority. Three weeks later, in Salmon v. Quin, counsel for the defendants used the same argument in the Court of Appeal, and lost. FARWELL, L.J., disapproved of the statement in Buckley on Companies, but did not deal with the decision of NEVILLE, J. Meanwhile, the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, practically copied out the old article 55 in article 71 of its own Table A; and the ninth edition of Buckley, commenting on the new article 71, corrected the statement disapproved by FARWELL, L.J. The present position seems to be this. No authority has asserted in terms that "regulations" thoughout the old article 55 and similar articles means only articles, or resolutions duly altering articles; but that conclusion is inevitable. The only way of controlling directors armed with the usual powers, so long as they act law-fully and cannot be convicted of bad faith, is to rescind or modify the article which gives them their powers. There is a contract between the shareholders and the company, embodied in the articles, and it can be medified or rescinded only as part of

The position is interesting, not only in itself, but also in its bearing on the use of the company's name in litigation. The courts are accustomed to the sight of a company bringing an action, and then moving to strike out its name; that is the result of Foss v. Harbottle (2 Hare 461). Foss in that case alleged that the company had been defrauded, and he and another sued on becontrol the board in the management of the affairs of the company had been defrauded, and he and another sued on bepany"; and the author referred to Isle of Wight Railway Co. v. half of themselves, and all the other shareholders except the defendants But WIGRAM, V.C., asked (p. 494): "How can this court act ina suit constituted as this is, if it is to be assumed, for the purposcs of the argument, that the powers of the body of proprietors are still in existence, and may lawfully be exercised for a purpose I ke that I have suggested ?"—the purpose f confirming the The principle, that the company must, if directors' acts. possible, be made a plaintiff, was established and obeyed. Other principles grew up round it, such as that of moving in the company's name to strike its name out, and that of allowing the case to stand over for one side or the other to obtain a majority at a general meeting : Pender v. Lushington (6 Ch. D. 70). Exceptions were recognized, such as the right of A to sue on behalf of himself and all others where the defendants had obtained a majority of shares by methods which were the subject of the action: Atwool v. Merryweather (5 Eq., p. 464 note), Bustard v. Earle (1902, A. C. 83). But the principle was unquestioned until, with the decision in the Automatic case, it became necessary to consider the positions of the directors and the simple majority on the particular question of litigation.

None of the Acts, from 1845 to 1908, makes any special mention of litigation among a company's powers. PALMER, in his specimen articles, includes among the powers specifically given to the board that of instituting, conducting, defending, compounding, or abandoning any legal proceedings by and against the company, or its officers, or otherwise concerning the affairs of the company (article 114 (9)). In the case of Marshall's Valve Gear Co. v. Manning, Wardle, & Co. (supra), governed by Table A, the power of litigation was the power in question, and it was treated throughout, like any other power, since article 55 does not mention it. But in a recent case of Re Tylor & Sons, Tylor & Sons v. King and Others, which came before WARRINGTON, J., on two motions on the 27th of May last, the articles were more explicit. Article 81 of this company's articles of association gave to the directors general powers of management and the powers of the company in general meeting, "but subject nevertheless to the provisions of the statutes and of these presents, and to any regulations from time to time made by the company in general Article 82 specifically empowered them "to institute, conduct, defend, compound, or abandon any legal proceedings by or against the company." These are PALMER's forms. The action was one to restrict the authority of the board in regard to the remuneration of officers and otherwise. It was admitted that the approaching general meeting of the 1st of June would certainly, if permitted to vote on the question, uphold the plaintiffs against the board, and the motion to strike out the company's name was treated as if that meeting had already been held and the opinion of the majority clearly ascertained. WARRINGTON, J., accepted from the Automatic case and from Salmon v. Quin the position that in these and similar articles "regulations" means "articles" or "special resolutions altering the articles." "So far as the conduct of the company's business is by the articles vested in the directors, then," he said, "the action of the directors is not to be controlled except of course by some resolution which alters the articles." But he held that it would be hardly possible, and too absurd a result, that these articles should be read as giving the directors the exclusive power to institute an action against themselves based on their conduct of the company's business; and, distinguishing some "actions by or against the ' from others, he declined to read article 82 as covering them all. Since this kind of action was not "confided exclusively to the directors," he allowed the plaintiffs to use the comrany's Writing with all deference to the opinion of the learned judge, and with a full sense of the complicated difficulties of the subject, it is yet not easy to see exactly how this flank movement ound the Automatic case was executed. There was no distinction .n the articles between one kind of action by or against the company and another. The word "exclusively" does not occur in this type of article at all; it is an epithet with which the Automatic case has tacitly and impartially covered every delegation of any power to the directors, except where the contrary is expressly asserted in the articles.

Whatever order had been made on this motion, there were unusual possibilities in the case. Counsel promised on behalf of the directors that if he lost his motions they would give instructions for the conduct of the trial in the company's name; and it was perhaps unfortunate that his clients got the action dismissed on the second motion. He pointed out in argument that if the company's name were struck out the plaintiff might still sue on behalf of himself and all others: there would be merely a new exception engrafted on Foss v. Harbottle. But the importance of the new exception would depend on the number of companies which, whether specifically or implicitly, delegate the power of litigation to their boards, and presumably almost every company does so. The change would be merely a change in practice; but in view of the stringency of the rule in Foss v. Harbottle, and the frequency and importance of the cases involving it, the practice becomes a point of considerable importance.

CASES OF LAST SITTINGS. House of Lords.

CONWAY (Pauper) v. WADE. 26th and 27th April; 27th July.

TRADE UNION-" TRADE DISPUTE "-ACT DONE IN CONTEMPLATION OR FURTHERANCE OF A TRADE DISPUTE—NON-PAYMENT OF FINE TO UNION
—THREAT TO EMPLOYER—TRADES DISPUTES ACT, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 47),

In 1903 the plaintiff, a member of a trade union, was fined 10s. for a breach of the union rules: this fine was not paid. In 1907 the plaintiff joined another branch of the union. The defendant, who was the district delegate of the union, at the instigation of some of the plaintiff's fellow-workmen, who knew of the unpaid fine, and of the treasurer of the branch of the union which had imposed the fine, went to the foreman of the plaintiff's employers, and procured the plaintiff's dismissal by threats that unless this was done the other union men would leave of threats that unless this was done the other union men would leave off work. In an action in the County Court against the defendant to recover damages for procuring the plaintiff's dismissal, the jury found that there was not a trade dispute existing or contemplated by the men; that what the defendant did prevented or was intended to prewent the plaintiff from getting or retaining employment; that it was done to compel the plaintiff to pay and to punish the plaintiff for not having paid the fine; that what the defendant did was not done only to warn the plaintiff's employer that the union men would leave in consequence of their being unwilling to work with the plaintiff, and that it was not done in consequence of their objecting to work with that it was not done in consequence of their objecting to work with him, and that the defendant did something more than act on behalf of the men employed by the plaintiff's employers. Judgment for the plaintiff was entered for £50. The Divisional Court upheld that decision. The Court of Appeal held, however, that the words "in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute" in section 3 of the Act of 1906 were perfectly general, and that upon the findings judgment should be entered for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed. Held, that as the words "an act done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute" in section 3 must logically mean either that a trade dispute was imminent and the act was done in expectation and with a view to it, or that the dispute was actually existing and the act was done in support of one side of it: the defendant, on the facts.

was done in support of one side of it; the defendant, on the facts, was not protected by the section and was liable in damages.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (reported 52 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 748; 1908, 2 K. B. 844, 78 L. J. K. B. 14) reversed.

Appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the Court of Appeal reversing a judgment entered for the plaintiff at the trial of the action before Judge Arthur O'Connor and a jury at the South Shields County Court. The defendant Wade was a trade union officer belong-County Court. The detendant wade was a trade union omeer belonging to the National Amalgamated Union of Labour, and in order to compel the plaintiff Conway to pay a fine due to the trade union and to punish him for not paying it, induced his employers, Messrs. Readhead & Sons, of South Shields, to discharge him by threats that if Conway were retained as a workman all the other men would be called out. onway was discharged, and in the county court obtained a verdict for Conway was discharged, and in the county court obtained a verdict for 250 damages against Wade. The Divisional Court affirmed this decision. The Court of Appeal held that the defendant was protected by section 5 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, although at the time the threats were made there was no trade dispute subsisting or contemplated, and the defendant had acted on his own authority and not that of his union. The ground of the decision in the Court of Appeal was that the section quoted was general in its application and was not confined to an act done by a party to a trade dispute. Conway appealed in forma pauperis to this House.

The HOUSE having considered,

appealed in forma pauperis to this House.

The House having considered,
Lord Lorebuen, C., after stating the facts, said that the only defence really made to the action, beyond a denial of the facts, was that the defendant was protected by section 3 of the Disputes Act, 1906, and it was upon that ground alone that the Court of Appeal decided the case. That section provided that, "An act done by a person in business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labour as he wills." Manifestly it was essential to any defence under that section for the defendant to shew that the act comptained of was done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute. Otherwise the section could not possibly apply. Knowing how averse the Court of Appeal was to usurping the functions of a jury, he concluded that the learned judges were enabled to bring the case within this section by taking a different view of the section from that which he himself took. For the verdict of the jury seemed, he believed, to all their lordships a reasonable enough conclusion from the evidence, and one which it was their duty to support. The effect of the section was to render it no longer possible that any question should be raised in such cases as the present as to whether there was "sufficient justification" or not. The condition contained in those words as to trade disputes was made sufficient. In conclusion, his lordship said, I come now to the meaning of the In conclained in those words as to trade disputes was made suggested. In conclusion, his lordship said, I come now to the meaning of the words, "an act done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade diswords, "an act done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute." Those words are not new in an Act of Parliament, they appear in the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875. I think they mean that either a dispute is imminent and the act is done in they mean that either a dispute is imminent and the act is done in expectation and with a view to it, or that the dispute is already existing and the act is done in support of one side to it. In either case the act must be genuinely done as described, and the dispute must be a real thing imminent or existing. I agree with the Master of the Rolls that the section cannot fairly be confined to an act done by a party to the dispute. I do not believe that was intended. A dispute may have arisen, for example, in a single colliery, of which the subject is so important to the whole industry that either employers or workmen may think a general lockout or a general strike is necessary to gain their point. Few are parties to, but all are interested in, the dispute. If, however, some meddler sought to use the trade dispute as a cloak beneath ever, some meddler sought to use the trade dispute as a cloak beneath which to interfere with impunity in other people's work or business, a jury would be entirely justified in saying that what he did was in contemplation or in furtherance, not of the trade dispute, but of his own designs, sectarian, political, or purely mischievous, as the case might be. These words do, in my opinion, in some sense import motive, and in the case I have put, a quite different motive would be present. If the jury so found, the meddler would not be protected by the third section of the Act of 1906. But I have no doubt that an act done with a single eye to the dispute "in contemplation or in furtherance" of it, would not be actionable on any of the grounds furtherance of it, would not be actionable on any of the grounds specified in the section. In regard to a peacemaker, who, in the opinion of the Court of Appeal, is not protected under this section, he requires no protection. A peacemaker is not under the laws of this country, and never has been held, liable in an action. As for the present appeal, I move your lordships to allow it with costs here and

PROBATE—ADMINISTRATION—GRANT TO A CREDITOR—ASSIGNEE OF DEBT—SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT, 1873 (36 & 37 VICT. c. 66), 8. 25, SUB-SECTION 6.

Under certain circumstances the court will grant administration to a creditor who is an assignee of a debt.

Motion for administration with will annexed. It appeared that the deceased died on the 10th of April, 1909, having executed a will dated the 10th of June, 1905. He left a widow and one child. To the former he bequeathed all his property, which was heavily mortgaged. The widow and the other executor had renounced probate and their rights, and had also filed consents to the present application. At the time of and had also filed consents to the present application. At the time of his death the deceased owed a sum of £16 odd to a house decorator named Passmore. On the 12th of May, 1909, Passmore, by deed, assigned this debt to the present applicant, Webb. Due notice of this assignment had been given to the executors, who did not oppose the application. The assignor, Passmore, had been asked to join with the applicant in asking for a joint grant, but had declined. Counsel for the applicant admitted that prior to the Judicature Act, 1873, there might have been difficulties for his client: vide Baynes v. Harrison (1 Deane Ecc. Reps. 15), Macnin v. Coles and Another (35 L. J. P. & M. 175). But since the passing of that statute it was submitted that there But since the passing of that statute it was submitted that there did not appear any objection to the assignee of a debt taking a grant as creditor.

BIGHAM, P., granted the administration as prayed.—Counsel, Wippell. Solicitor, S. W. Woolmer.

Legal News. Appointments.

Mr. Charles H. L. Neish, barrister-at-law, has been appointed Registrar of the Privy Council, in succession to Sir Edward S. Hope, K.C.B., whose resignation will shortly take effect. Mr. Neish is the private secretary of the Lord Chancellor. He was called to the bar by the Middle Temple in June, 1881, and went the Oxford Circuit.

Mr. Benjamin Arthur Cohen has been appointed Junior Counsel for Admiralty Common Law business, and Mr. Alexander Dingwall Bateson to be Junior Counsel for Admiralty Division work, both in succession to the late Mr. William Wills.

At Croydon County Court, on the 11th inst., says the Times, Judge Harington held that professional football players are workmen within the meaning of the Act of 1906. The applicants, Walker and Roberts, played for the Crystal Palace Football Club last season. The former prayed for the Crystal Palace Football Club last season. The former was injured in the match against Swindon on October 17th, and the latter in the game with Leyton on September 5th. In each case the injury was a displacement of a cartilage in the leg, which, according to the medical evidence, could in all probability be cured by an operation, in refusing which the judge ruled that the applicants had acted unreasonably. They were each awarded £1 a week for a certain time, subject to a suspensory award of one penny a week pending the results of the operations to be performed.

results of the operations to be performed.

Lord Langdale, says the Globe, who was a notable law reformer in his time, enjoys, with Lord James of Hereford, the distinction of having refused the Lord Chancellorship. When Lord John Russell made him the dazzling offer, he put down on paper the pros and consthus: "Contra, persuasion that no man can perform all the duties that are annexed to the office of Chancellor. Unwilling to seem to undertake duties some of which must (as I think) be necessarily neglected. No particular party zeal, and no capacity to acquire any. Declining health. Pro, salary £14,000, instead of £7,000. Pension of £5,000 assured, instead of £3,500 not assured. Patronage for benefit of connections much needing it. Some, though small and doubtful, hope of effecting some further reform in Chancery." In the end, notwithstanding the alluring thought of patronage, the contras prevailed.

At the Feltham Petty Sessions, on the 16th inst., George Dumet, of Holland-park, Kensington, was summoned for exceeding the 20-mile Holland-park, Kensington, was summoned for exceeding the 20-mile speed limit when driving a motor-car on the Bath road at Stanwell on July 26th. The speed of the car was stated to be 27 miles an hour. Mr. Williams, solicitor, who appeared for the defendant, asked the officer who timed the car if he noticed which way the wind was blowing when it was on the measured furlong. The officer stated the wind appeared to be blowing across the road. Mr. Williams: Do you make a note of the direction of the wind when you time a car? The witness: No. we never take any notice of the wind Mr. Williams witness: No; we never take any notice of the wind. Mr. Williams submitted that the force of the wind, if blowing the same way as submitted that the force of the wind, if blowing the same way as the car was going, must have an influence upon the speed of the car, and it was possible it might accelerate the speed as much as ten miles an hour. The Chairman said it was impossible for the Bench to differentiate between speed caused by the wind and speed caused by the engine. All that they could take cognizance of was that the speed was 27 miles an hour, and for driving at that pace the defendant would have to pay a fine of £5.

In the course of the debate on the Land Tax Clauses of the Finance Bill on the 12th inst., Mr. Walters, the member for Sheffield, Bright-side, described the procedure he would adopt if it fell to his lot to value the land round Leicester. He should not find much difficulty value the land round Leicester. He should not find much difficulty in ascertaining, from the experience of past years and the present demand, what was the amount of land that reasonably could be expected to be sold at any given time. He should divide the undeveloped land up into districts, showing the portions which were suitable for large houses, factories, and business premises, for small houses and for workmen's dwellings respectively. Carrying his analysis further, he should find that some portions were riper than others and should deal with the land in strips, marking off the land immediately ripe, for which he should expect a present demand, and others and should deal with the land in strips, marking off the land immediately ripe, for which he should expect a present demand, and then the portions not so ripe, till he came to the remoter parts, as to which there was no present element of building value at all, and that was not undeveloped building land. The assumption that the land was to be all sold was entirely fallacious. It would be absurd, however, to under-estimate the difficulties. The valuation would be an elaborate and difficult process, but though difficult he believed that it elaborate and difficult process, but though difficult he believed that it was a reasonable, possible, and practicable scheme under which experienced men might proceed to arrive at a valuation. They would have to make allowances for the possible acceleration or diminution in the rate of building, but those were matters of knowledge and experience. He was satisfied, however, that the principle laid down in the Bill was fair and sound, and if applied by experienced men he did not see why a fair value should not be arrived at.
